Returning to Dance Class after an Injury or a Life Change

If you wish to return to class after an extended absence (and I really hope you will), here are some suggestions of ways that have worked for others:

- 1) I have two girls who have returned recently who are taking private lessons to be able to test out and catch up with the level of the girls they were with when they left. They realize they're behind and have chosen that way to review the choreographies they knew, while attending the less advanced class they've chosen. And they get an opportunity to learn and enjoy, in class, the new choreographies that have been created or review choreographies they know. It gives brain and body time to catch up and/or to test-out into the next level.
- 2) If you've been away more than a year, I always suggest to those returning to consider signing up for ANY class at a level below theirs (unless you were in level one when you left, in which case that works just fine) to get back in shape. MANY dancers are having fun and saying they are actually learning more this time around and they feel ahead of the class they signed up for, instead of behind. If it's a new choreography they hadn't learned, it's easier to learn, fun and faster, because it's at a not-as-advanced level as the level when they left.

And, of course, if they've graduated from beginner before they were out, they are invited to additionally attend a beginner class (only during the last three months of the six month course) for free, to build strength and stamina. EVERYONE in the studio can do that {as long as they don't try to teach the class for me :-). Sometimes dancers get so excited about how easy it is to re-learn that level, that they start telling the class what worked for them and telling me to say the same things exactly the way I did in their class :-)}

- 3) Some people feel more comfortable being and performing with people they know, even though that approach may lead to frustration due to being behind their classmates. Each dancer needs to make choices according to her/his individual needs.

All of these are only suggestions, and you should do what you feel is right for you or where you feel most comfortable. I am always happy to offer suggestions for you individually when requested.

with love, ISIS

A Reminder for all Dancers: The only class you can attend after graduation from the Beginner Beginner, Intermediate Beginner and Advanced Beginner 6 month basic course, with no charge, is Intermediate-Advanced Beginner, as long as you are registered in a class from Advanced I - Pro. All other classes, even if they are a level below your class, do have a fee since frequently that class is working on a choreography or dance skills that you may need or haven't had the opportunity to learn or need to take in order to review for test-outs or because we have added new choreographies!
